

MSN/FNP Preceptor Resource Manual

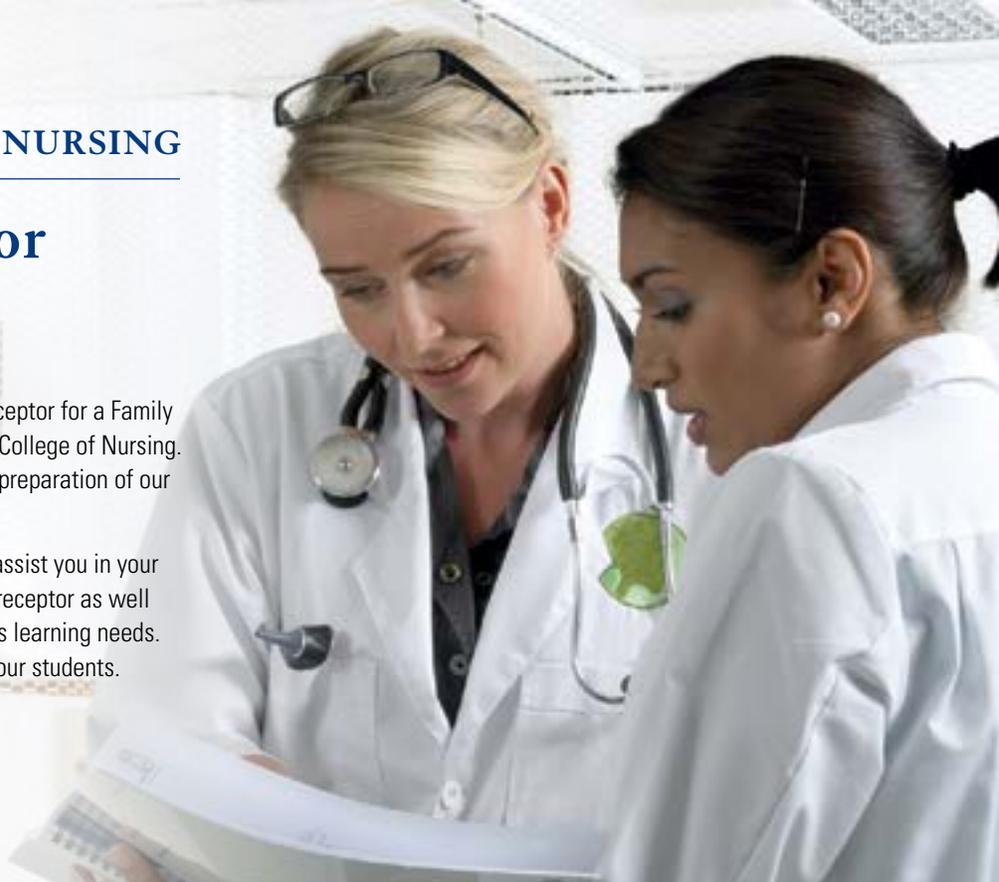

We are pleased that you have accepted the role as preceptor for a Family Nurse Practitioner (FNP) student from the Chamberlain College of Nursing. Your assistance and guidance will greatly enhance the preparation of our students for entrance into FNP practice.

The information in this manual has been developed to assist you in your preceptor role and will explain what it means to be a preceptor as well as the processes in place to help you meet the student's learning needs. Thank you again for your commitment to education for our students.

Sincerely,

John Distler, DPA, MBA, MS, FNP-C, RN, FAANP

The Chamberlain Preceptorship

Working in collaboration with a course faculty member and the student, the preceptor plays a key role in enhancing the depth of a student's advancement of nursing practice in academic, clinical and health policy environments. Serving as a role model for the student, the preceptor enables the student to see and experience what an expert nurse does on a daily basis while encouraging the student to ask questions. The preceptor challenges, guides and directs the student in a collaborative process to design an evidence-based practice change initiative based on scientifically rigorous and clinically significant research. Fundamental to this process is the preceptor's willingness to share professional values, beliefs and skills while incorporating legal, ethical and professional practice standards.

The preceptor develops a professional and collaborative relationship with the student. This connection is built upon mutual trust and open communication. Like patient assessment, the preceptor assesses the student's learning needs and learning style. In the time-limited practicum experience, the preceptor encourages and supports the student as someone who understands the program project and can support and guide the student through all aspects of the process. The practicum course faculty members work collaboratively with the preceptor and student at all points of the experience.

In addition to role modeling, the preceptor assists the student in grasping the contextual realities of the practice environment. While topics such as time management and prioritization are frequently emphasized in the classroom, the practicum environment brings these skills to life. The student hones the skill of prioritizing patient and family needs while integrating caring and learning into the day's routine. Doing this makes the routine of a flexible and changing environment more comfortable and manageable. The preceptor is expected to support the student in acquiring the needed skills and experiences to fulfill the outcomes for the course.

Lastly, the preceptor preserves the ideals of respectful, ethical and competent practice. Throughout the practicum experience, the preceptor oversees the care delivered by the student.

To assure professional accountability and safe, competent care, the preceptor facilitates reflection upon actions taken. This reflection provides deeper meaning for the student in identifying a clinical practice concern for his/her project and for improvement of the student's own professional practice.

Adult learners have specific and unique characteristics. One characteristic is a desire to know the why of learning prior to undertaking the learning experience. Adults invest energy in what they wish to learn and perceive value in the learning. At the same time they wish to be treated with respect and are capable of self-direction. Adults also bring with them a volume of past experiences, including experiences with learning. Adults want to learn content that has immediate practical application in real-life situations. Most importantly adult learning in the FNP practicum courses is a collaborative process with preceptors who have experience in their specific practice areas and who are willing to share that experience with FNP students. Thus, the role of the FNP preceptor is to arrange for a meaningful and rich practicum experience that moves the student toward attaining competency in providing nursing care in a variety of areas.

Preceptor Guidelines

The Preceptor Defined

Chamberlain College of Nursing defines preceptors as qualified individuals who work one-to-one with FNP students in the practicum area to promote attainment of student learning objectives. The FNP preceptor can be an advanced practice nurse or a licensed physician with experience and expertise in the student's specific clinical area.

The Preceptors & Faculty

Preceptors are utilized in FNP practicum courses to serve as role models, mentors and direct supervisors of students in the practicum area. Preceptors do not replace faculty, but work closely with faculty in facilitating student success. Preceptors are vital in contributing information for evaluating student performance; however, nursing program faculty maintain the responsibility for the final student evaluation.

Establishing Learning Objectives

The student will develop learning objectives for the practicum experience in collaboration with you and the course faculty member. We ask that you provide opportunities for the student to collaboratively engage in activities that help the student to achieve these objectives.

Observation & Evaluation

While one-to-one supervision of the student throughout the clinical experience is not necessary, you will need to work closely enough with the student to evaluate performance in an objective manner. The Chamberlain faculty member will also evaluate the Chamberlain student and will be available by phone and/or email with weekly consultation and evaluation of the experience scheduled at your convenience.

Practicum Coordinator

The practicum coordinator facilitates and maintains the contracts and required clinical compliance documents for the student, course faculty and you. Clinical compliance documents may include, but are not limited to, CPR certification, immunizations and other health-related requirements. The practicum coordinator will provide you with faculty contact information prior to the start of the practicum experience.

Roles & Responsibilities

Responsibilities of the Practicum Preceptor

- Collaborate with Chamberlain faculty to promote student success in the practicum courses
- Orient the student to the practicum site environment, policies and procedures
